

A wide-angle photograph of a serene landscape. In the foreground, a vast, calm body of water, likely a bay or lake, stretches across the frame. The water is a deep, clear blue, with subtle ripples and reflections of the sky and distant land. In the middle ground, a dark, forested shoreline is visible, with a few small, light-colored buildings or structures nestled among the trees. Beyond the shoreline, a range of mountains rises against a clear, pale blue sky. The mountains are bathed in a soft, golden light, suggesting the time is either early morning or late afternoon. The overall atmosphere is peaceful and tranquil.

Loch Lomond!

By yon bonnie banks and by yon bonnie braes
Where the sun shines bright on Loch Lomond
Where me and my true love were ever wont to gae
On the bonnie bonnie banks of Loch Lomond

O yeill tak the high road and J'll tak the low road and J'll be in Scotland before ye,
But me and my true love will never meet again
On the bonnie bonnie banks of Loch Lomond

J mind when we parted in yon shady glen
On the steep steep sides of Ben Lomond
Where in purple hue the Highland hills we view
And the moon looks out from the gloamin

While walking through the streets of Edinburgh, Lady Scott (1810-1910) and her husband obtained both verses and melody from a 'poor boy in the street'. Despite extensive research, the composer has not been traced but the song was almost certainly composed in 1745 but was not published until about 1845.

In 1745 Bonnie Prince Charlie was in retreat from England and on his way back to Scotland, some of his wounded had to be left behind in Carlisle. The song refers to two of them, one to be executed and the other to be released at the same hour.

Celtic belief is that the spirit of the dead prisoner travelling by the 'low road' back home would reach Scotland before his freed comrade who would have to trudge the difficult miles by the 'high road' of the living.
